Deficit plan showdown

Reuters

WASHINGTON President Obama laid out a $3.6 trillion plan Monday to cut budget deficits partly by raising taxes on the rich, but Republicans rejected it as a political stunt and made clear the proposal has little chance of becoming law.

Vowing to veto any plan that relies solely on spending cuts to reduce deficits, the Democratic president's recommendations set the stage for an ideological fight with Republicans opposed to tax increases that will stretch through Election Day 2012.

"I will not support any plan that puts all the burden of closing our deficit on ordinary Americans," Obama said. "We are not going to have a one-sided deal that hurts the folks who are most vulnerable."

Obama's speech reflected a more aggressive defense of Democratic principles after he took a battering in two previous budget battles with Republicans this year, which helped drive his approval rating to new lows.

I will not support any plan that puts all the burden of closing our deficit on ordinary Americans."

— President Obama

Most Americans say they are unhappy with Obama's economic leadership, and the president's re-election hopes could hinge on his ability to convince voters that Republicans represent the rich, not the middle class.

On Monday, he repeatedly said all Americans must pay their "fair share" of taxes, and he sharpened the difference between his vision for America and that of Republicans in a speech meant to regain support among core supporters who have said Obama has failed to stick to liberal principles.

Republicans have consistently opposed measures resembling tax hikes, saying they will hurt the struggling economy by increasing the burden on job-creating businesses. Republican leaders stuck to that position on Monday, quickly rejecting Obama's plan.

"Veto threats, a massive tax hike, phantom savings and punting on entitlement reform is not a recipe for economic or job growth," Republican Senate leader Mitch McConnell said.

House Speaker John Boehner said Obama failed to offer a "serious" recommendation to the special bipartisan congressional committee tasked with finding at least $1.2 trillion in savings.

Obama's approval ratings hit new low

MCT

WASHINGTON President Obama's job approval rating has plunged to a dismal 39 percent, the lowest of his presidency, as increasing numbers disapprove of his handling of the nation's ailing economy, according to a new McClatchy-Marist poll.

The low job approval rating among registered voters, down from 44 percent last month, suggests enormous trouble for a president who faces re-election in 14 months.

The 52 percent who disapprove of Obama's performance represents the first time that number has climbed over 50 percent.

"These numbers could typically spell doom for an incumbent," poll director Lee Miringoff said.

Even the president's remedies for the economy are being received coolly. One-third approved and 61 percent disapproved of his handling of the economy.

Sixty-one percent said the worst was yet to come for the economy, while 64 percent said Obama's $447 billion jobs plan, which he's been pushing hard for days, didn't go far enough.

The poll surveyed 1,042 adults—825 of them registered voters—on Sept. 13 and Wednesday. The margin of error for the entire sample is plus or minus 3 percentage points; for registered voters, it's 3.5 percentage points.

WORD OF THE WEEK

Buffett rule: Noun. Obama's call to overhaul the tax code included a "Buffett Rule," named after billionaire investor Warren Buffett, that would set a minimum tax rate for people earning more than $1 million a year.

It would only impact a tiny minority of the millions of Americans filing tax returns.

But Obama aides say it would set a standard of fairness that would boost revenue if applied. REUTERS

Mayor of the CTA still up for grabs

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

 » @tracyswartz

For commuters, riding the CTA will have to be its own reward.

On Friday, Mayor Emanuel announced a new initiative with mobile application Foursquare in which Chicagoans and visitors can earn an official Windy City badge if they check in at at least five of 20 designated neighborhood spots.

A beach, a brewery, a park, a doughnut shop and various museums made the cut—but CTA stops did not. (One attraction is the Vida Simple Mural, which is outside the Damen Pink Line stop.)

While there is no official recognition for CTA stops with the Windy City badge, CTA spots have been popular check-in places since Foursquare launched two years ago. Chicagoans have become mayor of their train stops and buses and have shared station insider info with their fellow commuters.

Tips include:

» The Ashland stop on the Green and Pink lines in West Town often smells of doughnuts because it's located near a retailer that bakes goods for Dunkin' Donuts.

TALK TO US

Which CTA stops should be included in the Windy City badge? Send an email to tswartz@tribune.com. Please include your full name, age and neighborhood.

» Riders can avoid the lines for the west-bound No. 77 bus outside the Belmont stop in Lakeview by walking half a block east to the bus stop at Belmont Avenue and Clark Street.

» There's a cheerful worker at the Grand Blue Line stop in River West who greets riders with a "good morning."

The "L" is one of the most unique aspects of Chicago, and it would have been nice if it were part of the Foursquare list.

Perhaps the inclusion would have encouraged Chicagoans to go beyond their CTA routine and explore their city by riding their train or bus a few stops farther than usual or trying a different line altogether.

Some stops that would have been worth mentioning, in GP's opinion:

» The 18th Pink Line stop on the Lower West Side for its murals and Pilsen flavor.

» The Quincy stop in the Loop for its '00s feel (as in 1800s).

RIDER'S BLOCK

My pledge to ride every CTA bus line continues. I rode the No. 132-Goose Island Express this week and boiled my review down to a tweet.

@tracyswartz 22 mins from Clybourn Metra to Chicago/Halsted. Gives an industrial tour of Lincoln Park area. Runs infrequently. 3 other riders besides me.

» 125 routes down, 14 to go!

Next up: No. X28-Stony Island Express.

KICKING & STREAMING

NETFLIX ANNOUNCES SHAKE-UP AMID CHANGES IN CUTTHROAT, INSTANT ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY

CNN

Those little red envelopes will stick around, but they will carry a new name.

Netflix is rebranding its 12-year-old movies-by-mail service as Qwikster and adding video games to its catalog. Reed Hastings, the company's CEO, made the announcement Sunday night. The Web-streaming portion will continue to be called Netflix, he wrote on the company's blog.

After the separation, people who subscribe to both services will have to log in to two separate websites, netflix.com and qwikster.com, to manage their movie queues and account information. Customer reviews and ratings from Netflix will be ported to Qwikster for the launch, but after that, people will have to rate and search for movies on each site separately.

Qwikster's site currently presents a landing page that says it is "launching soon." Hastings did not offer a timeline for Qwikster's debut. Andy Rendich, the operations chief and 12-year veteran of the company, will run the new mail-order arm.

In addition to DVDs and Blu-ray discs, the new service will offer console games for Microsoft's Xbox 360, Nintendo's Wii and Sony's PlayStation 3 for an extra monthly fee. The change will put pressure on GameFly, a competing service dedicated to subscription game mailings.

"Members have been asking for video games for many years, and now that DVD by mail has its own team, we are finally getting it done," Hastings wrote. Responding to a question in the blog post's comments, he wrote, "Old Fogey discs will last a long time."

Another person questioned whether Netflix was setting the DVD business up to be sold off later and asked how long until that would happen. "A long time,"

Hastings replied. "We know the business better than anyone else."

Dish Network, which recently acquired Blockbuster in a bankruptcy auction for $320 million, is believed to be unveiling a revamped movie-streaming service Friday. Netflix also faces competition from Hulu, YouTube and an array of new entrants.

Netflix customers were incensed in July when the company announced it would stop bundling the streaming service for free with DVD-by-mail plans, effectively increasing the price for some by as much as 60 percent. Hastings finally offered an apology, not for the price hike but for failing to clearly communicate why the change was being made.

"It is clear from the feedback over the past two months that many members felt we

Netflix's announcement Monday that it will split its DVD delivery and streaming operations comes amid a landscape awash with options for people looking to get their instant entertainment fix. REDEYE, AP

amazon video

Amazon Instant Video

Offers thousands of movies and TV episodes with prices per item ranging from $1 to $5. No monthly subscription plan.

Apple iTunes

The pay-per-view option features new movies and TV show rentals in the $1-$5 range.

Blockbuster

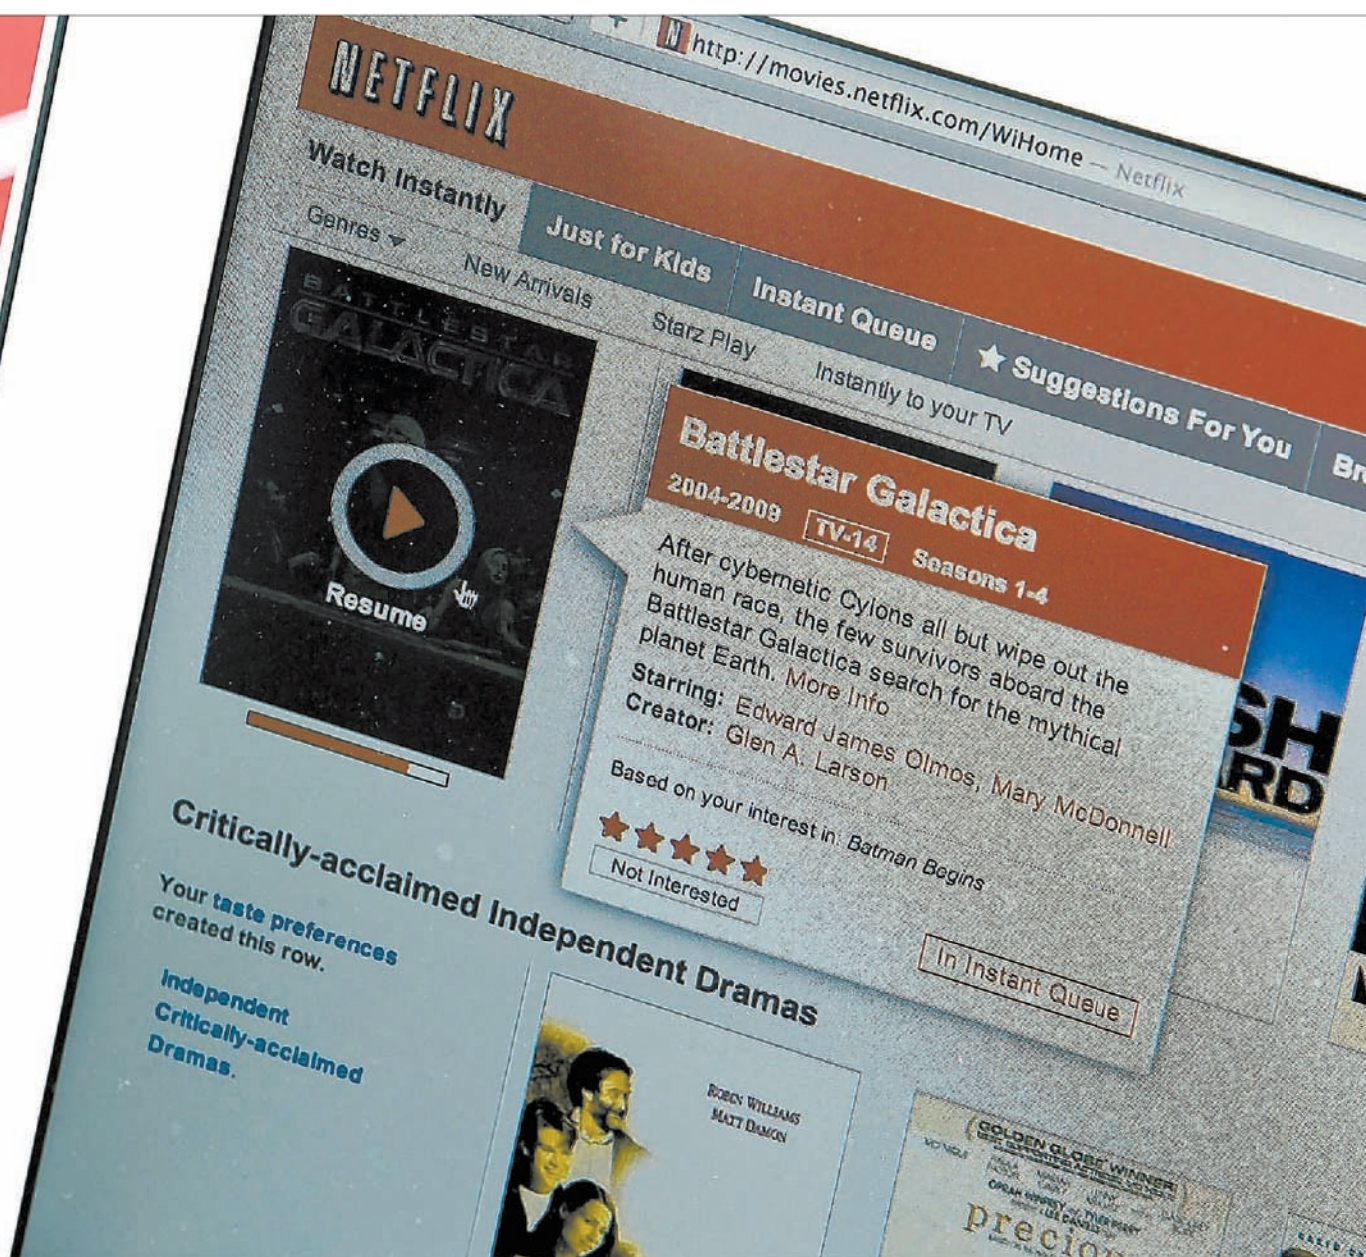

The company has switched to per-day pricing, with movies costing $2 or $3 for the first day and $1 a day thereafter. No monthly streaming plan. Its Netflix-like mailing program runs either $12 a month (one disc at a time) or $17 a month (for two).

Cable

Hundreds of channels available for about $60 a month. Firms such as Time Warner and Comcast offer on-demand video rentals that range from $2-$5, depending on how recent the release is.

BLOOMBERG

He said he hoped to avoid a similar fate to Borders Group, the bookstore chain that filed for bankruptcy this year, or AOL, the dial-up Internet king that is struggling to transform itself into an online media company after a nasty corporate breakup from Time Warner, which is the parent company of CNN.

"In hindsight, I slid into arrogance based upon past success," Hastings wrote. "Both the Qwikster and Netflix teams will work hard to regain your trust. We know it will not be overnight."

In a video explanation, he clarified the company's reasoning for the changes, saying, "DVD and streaming were becoming more and more different, and we could do a better job for both services if we separated them."

While Netflix is not going back on the price changes from earlier this summer, customers should not expect further increases, Hastings wrote. In his response to a comment on the blog, he said the adjustment was designed to help Netflix improve the quality of movies and TV shows available on the streaming service, which many say is lacking.

Is that a smoking Elmo?

CNN

Netflix has changed the name of its DVD mailing service to Qwikster, but it apparently forgot to consider the Twitter ramifications of the switch.

The Twitter handle @qwikster apparently isn't controlled by Netflix. A guy whose name is listed as Jason Castillo and whose icon on that social network is a cartoon Elmo smoking a joint has been tweeting from that account for months. The photo was changed Monday night.

The comments he makes have absolutely nothing to do with Netflix or Qwikster—and everything to do with sex and drugs.

"Bored as [bleep] wanna blaze but at the same time I don't ugh [bleep] it where's the bowl at spark me up lls," he wrote.

And: "Don't bother telling me who my ex is now dating! Cuzz now I feel bad for the [bleep] that has my sloppy seconds :)"

The account, which appears to have been active since April, had more than 8,000 followers Monday night.

It's worth noting that some other big-name Twitter handles aren't owned by the corresponding big-name companies. @Apple, for instance, has posted only two tweets, and appears not to be owned by the gadget maker.

The blog TechCrunch rounded up some of the best tweets making fun of the @qwikster situation:

"Pretty sure @netflix can score that @qwikster twitter handle for a dime bag and some porno mags," @mat wrote.

Other social media types are offering to help him find a lawyer.

Netflix did not respond immediately to a request for comment on the rogue Twitter handle.

Flanked by EPA officials and aldermen, Mayor Emanuel announces plans Monday to build boathouses along the Chicago River. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

M-Rahm floats plan for river boathouses

Chicago Tribune

Mayor Emanuel on Monday announced a plan to improve access to the Chicago River by building four boathouses on stretches of the waterway that already draw scores of kayakers and other paddlers.

The city will spend equal shares of public funds and private donations to build the structures, estimated to cost $4 million each. The boathouses will be located in River Park and Clark Park on the North Side, and in Ping Tom Park and near the 2800 block of South Eleanor Street on the South Side.

The announcement follows recent efforts to improve water quality in parts of the Chicago River and the Little Calumet River to make the waterways safer for recreation. Under orders from the U.S. and Illinois Environmental Protection Agencies, local officials will need to take more aggressive action to scour disease-causing bacteria from the water and prevent sewage overflows into the rivers during and after rainstorms.

"Much like Lake Michigan is Chicago's front yard, the Chicago River is our backyard and should be an asset that people across the city enjoy, not avoid," Emanuel said at a news conference in Ping Tom Park, flanked by aldermen and U.S. EPA Administrator Lisa Jackson.

Architects Jeanne Gang and Chris Lee will design the boathouses with students from the Illinois Institute of Technology. The facilities will include boat landings and rental concessions, providing more formal access now offered by a handful of private operators.

Emanuel appeared to put Jackson on the spot about helping local officials finance efforts to clean up the river, which was reversed away from Lake Michigan more than a century ago to keep the city's waste out of its source of drinking water.

The U.S. EPA estimates it will cost at least $355 million to complete the Deep Tunnel project intended to prevent sewage overflows into the river, and up to another $72 million to install bacteria-killing equipment at the North Side and Calumet sewage treatment plants.

"You are not going to turn something like this around with the flip of a switch," Emanuel said. But by attracting more people to the water, the mayor said, the city will help build public support for improving rivers that were treated for more than a century as little more than industrialized sewage canals.

Do cameras deter crime?

The city has spent millions of dollars installing surveillance cameras in high-crime neighborhoods, but a recent study shows the technology hasn't always cut down on crime. AP FILE PHOTO

Study: Results mixed in 2 neighborhoods

Chicago Tribune

Blue light cameras installed by Chicago police in Humboldt Park and West Garfield Park have reduced overall crime enough to justify the nearly $7 million the city has spent on the cameras since August 2006, according to a Washington-based research group.

But while crime in Humboldt Park fell nearly 20 percent in the months after surveillance cameras were installed, there was no decrease in crime in nearby West Garfield Park, according to the report released Monday by the Urban Institute.

One reason, the study said, is the disparity in the number of cameras in the two areas. Humboldt Park has a much higher concentration of surveillance cameras, with about 53 per square mile, compared with 36 per square mile in West Garfield Park.

"We did observe that the West Garfield Park area that we selected had a lot fewer cameras per square mile," said Nancy La Vigne, lead researcher and director of the Justice Policy Center at the institute.

When the Chicago police began installing blue light cameras in 2003, the goal was to reduce crime in some of the city's most violent neighborhoods. The surveillance cameras were positioned to monitor high-risk areas and provide a deterrent to crime.

Some West Garfield Park residents agreed with the study, saying they haven't seen crime go down since the cameras went up.

Before cameras arrived, much of the area's crime stemmed from drug sales and loitering "crowds on the corners," said Marie Henderson, owner of Out of the Past Records, 4407 W. Madison St., which sits across from a camera above Madison and Kostner Avenue.

"But the cameras are up, and we're still getting crowds on corners," said Henderson, who also said she has twice been a victim of auto theft since the camera was installed.

Former VP Cheney in Chicago

Speaking in Chicago U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald's home town, former Republican Vice President Dick Cheney said Monday his former chief of staff did not deserve what he got in the Valerie Plame case. Fitzgerald, acting as a special prosecutor, indicted 'Scooter' Libby as part of the 2005 investigation into who leaked the name of Plame, a CIA operative.

Biden coming to town

With President Obama in New York for meetings with the United Nations General Assembly as well as some fundraising, Vice President Joe Biden is scheduled to fly into Chicago on Tuesday to help the re-election cash effort. The White House said Biden will travel to Chicago "to attend events for the Democratic National Committee."

Tea Party event scheduled

Former Fox TV commentator Glenn Beck will be among the headliners later this month when Tea Party supporters gather in Illinois to hold the Midwest Tea Party convention in Schaumburg, officials announced Monday. TeaCon 2011 also will play host to Andrew Breitbart and others Sept. 30 and Oct. 1. TRIBUNE

'DADT' ends Tuesday for armed forces

1 The military's "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" law for gays is slated to run out as scheduled Tuesday, the armed forces said, ending a 17-year rule fraught with controversy.

A Pentagon spokesman said Monday that repeal of the law would mean gay and lesbian service members may now be open about their sexual orientation.

President Obama signed a repeal of the ban into law in December.

Air race death toll rises

2 A 10th person has died of injuries suffered when a plane participating in a Reno, Nev., air race plummeted into a crowd of spectators, a hospital spokesperson said Monday. Seven people, including the pilot, were killed on the tarmac, while the other three victims died at area hospitals.

Sea World hearing

3 A weeklong hearing outside Orlando that could determine the future of SeaWorld's killer-whale shows opened Monday with lawyers for the federal government arguing that the company's animal trainers cannot work safely while in close contact with the world's largest ocean predator.

4 Two Marines aboard a helicopter were killed Monday when the aircraft crashed during a training mission at a Southern California military base, officials said.

Lawyers fighting to halt execution

5 ATLANTA Defense lawyers mounted a final effort Monday for Troy Davis, a Georgia man set to be executed Wednesday for the murder of a police officer even though his supporters say he may be innocent.

The lawyers were due to present their evidence in Atlanta to Georgia's Board of Pardons and Parole, a five-person panel that will weigh whether to grant or deny clemency or issue a stay of execution of up to 90 days, his supporters said.

The case has become a cause celebre for opponents of the death penalty because seven of the nine witnesses who testified against Davis have since sworn affidavits recanting their trial testimony. Nobel Peace Prize laureate Desmond Tutu and Helen Prejean, who wrote the Dozens of people on Monday held a prayer vigil in downtown Atlanta outside the building where the board was deliberating.

"The legal system has failed to provide an adequate safety net for a person with a serious innocence claim," Laura Moya of Amnesty International USA said.

Carimi out with knee injury

Bears coach Lovie Smith said offensive lineman Gabe Carimi suffered a knee sprain, although an NFL source said he has a partial dislocation. There is no ligament damage, but Carimi likely will miss the Bears' next two games. TRIBUNE

It's only two weeks into the season, and Bears coach Lovie Smith already seems more fired up than usual.

"I'm going to tell you again, we didn't have the balance that we needed," Smith told the Tribune about the play calling in Sunday's loss to New Orleans. "I'm not going to give you any more reasons why. We'll have it better this week. That's my answer."

Ooookaaay then. We understand that answering a barrage of reporters' questions can get tedious, so we'll give the coach a pass. In the meantime, here are other reasons we think Smith might be a little bent out of shape.

Bought a Bulls season ticket package, only for the NBA lockout to happen. Yeah, we miss Derrick Rose too.

Thinks Betty White got robbed in the Emmy voting. "Hot in Cleveland" is his go-to to show on the team plane.

Forgot to visit the beach before the weather cooled off. There's always offseason vacation, Lovie, but try to push it into late February.

Chris Sosa

» @sayitissosa

When Chicago's baseball teams struggle this mightily, I can fall back on a pastime that's never out of season: deconstructing Ozzie Guillen.

I can't help it. I find it fascinating that a guy emerges from so many firestorms with barely so much as a singed eyebrow.

About a month ago, he launched a mini-tirade on how he would refuse to manage on a "one-year contract." Given that it's really just the end of the multi-year deal he signed, is that him secretly hoping to be fired? I still can't wrap my head around it. Where it leaves us, as it does most years, is in a place where Guillen's future is in doubt.

On one hand, winning a World Series buys him an almost inexhaustible amount of patience. On the other, lately the Sox have come down with square-peg-in-a-round-hole disease. I know if I were Guillen, the thought of playing small ball with Adam Dunn in the middle of the lineup would be enough to make me seek therapy. It'd be as maddening as trying to run on a treadmill while wearing roller skates.

Still, having Guillen around is never boring. And if his time with the Sox is up, I would love to see him manage the Cubs.

You read that right. It's not about wishing ruin upon my favorite team's city rival, either.

I really would enjoy seeing Guillen take his 88-56 record against the National League for a spin against Tony La Russa and Dusty Baker on a regular basis. Not to mention observing how he would handle Starlin Castro's lapse in concentration or Alfonso Soriano's penchant for disappearing in the second half of the season.

Say what you will about Guillen, he's the antithesis of a yes man. I picture him annoying his bosses so much that the Cubs finally break down and upgrade their facilities. What fan or player wouldn't want that?

The Cubs used to be pros at grabbing the spotlight, win or lose; now they're barely Double-A level. With Guillen, even their failures will be spectacular. They might even get a World Series trophy out of the deal.

Pitt looks the part

As far as we know, Brad Pitt is not considering a career change. But as the star of the upcoming movie "Moneyball," based on the life of Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, he's Sports Illustrated cover material. "It's shameful how little I know about baseball. ... I'm amazed they let me do this movie," Pitt told SI writer Austin Murphy. Oh, we're sure the studio execs—and your fans—could give you a few reasons, Brad.

MOUTHWATCH

"Just squatted down and stood up, and [it] popped, and sharp pain and burning. ... That's the way it goes. I'm glad it happened now instead of getting through the season and going into spring and having something happen and then you miss a month and a half right out of the gate."

—Cubs pitcher Kerry Wood, on the knee injury he suffered Saturday, which he'll have surgically repaired after the season. He said he hopes to pitch for the Cubs in 2012, if the team re-signs him.

11 spots to keep patio season going

By Emily Van Zandt | REDEYE

Just because the chilly wind of fall has rolled into Chicago doesn't mean patio season is completely bust. Thanks to the not-so-advanced science of space heaters, bargoers can keep their outdoor drinking going well into fall—weather permitting, of course. Check out a few of the bars and lounges around town working to keep patrons toasty. EVANZANDT@TRIBUNE.COM

Frontier

1072 N. Milwaukee Ave.
773-772-4322

This West Town bar and eatery plans to have its beer garden enclosed by mid-October so patrons can chow down on its gamey fare year-round.

Deuce's & The Diamond Club

3505 N. Clark St.

The lot-sized beer garden at this new two-story Wrigleyville bar won't go unused in colder weather thanks to some newly installed heaters.

Three Aces

1321 W. Taylor St.
312-243-1577

This neighborhood tavern with a rock 'n' roll vibe and big burgers in Little Italy plans to keep its patio open through November.

Prasino

1846 W. Division St.
312-878-1212

This new Wicker Park spot with a menu heavy on local ingredients plans to keep its patio heated for diners this fall.

Hoyt's

71 E. Wacker Dr.

Back to purgatory

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

Stepping into Logan Square's newest pizzeria, Dante's, I couldn't help but flash back to now-shuttered Purgatory Pizza in Lakeview. The bright red walls and concept bridging hell and pizza are similar, but Dante's takes it to the next level with a nod to author Dante and his "Inferno" poem depicting the depths of hell.

The standout among the BYOB spot's 20-inch, New York-style specialty pies (cheese, sausage and pepperoni and a daily special are offered by the slice) is the Inferno ($26), boasting "9 Levels of Hell!" by way of poblano and banana peppers, pepperoni, bacon, sausage, jalapeno, garlic, red onion and giardiniera. My taste buds were curious to see if the heat really was on.

PIZZA REVIEW:
DANTE'S PIZZERIA
3028 W. Armitage Ave.
773-342-0002

The toppings: The Beatrice's garlic sauce was tasty, though the mushrooms' consistency was a tad firm. The Inferno absolutely wasn't spicy enough to live up to its name. Mild spice doesn't even count as one circle of hell in my book.

The sauce: House-made sauce made from Italian plum tomatoes was nice and sweet, but far too meager on the Inferno.

The cheese: Good-enough, but unmemorable whole milk cheese was easily overshadowed.

The crust: Disappointingly inconsistent. On the three pizzas we tried—the Inferno, the Beatrice ($23) and a slice of cheese ($3.50)—the crust was cooked to three different levels, none of them perfect. The undercooked, doughy Beatrice (topped with portabello and button mushrooms and garlic sauce) worked better than the overcooked cheese slice and the flimsy/soggy Inferno, which never stood a chance at supporting its abundant toppings. (A night in my fridge helped considerably.)

The Charon pizza at Dante's Pizzeria
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

Other stuff: In an unsurprising effort to reiterate its badassness, Dante's soundtrack is all punk rock and metal. Aaron Butts (who co-owns with Tim Murphy and also George Simos of Rocking Horse and High Dive) says the pizzeria plans to have a liquor license in a few years, but until then, it's BYOB with no corkage fee. Sadly, there are no plans to offer customers buckets of ice for their bottles. When we visited, they didn't even have ice.

Bottom line: Neither heavenly nor hellish, Dante's has some big pizzas, decent flavors and a number of kinks to work out. The constantly increasing line I witnessed while chowing down indicates the neighborhood is plenty willing to give 'em a shot. MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM | @MATTPAIS

TUESDAY
PREMIERES

The Biggest Loser
7 p.m. NBC
Season 12 premiere

Chicago native Lucas Neff gave us these hints about what "Raising Hope" fans can expect in Season 2, which begins at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday on Fox. c.w.

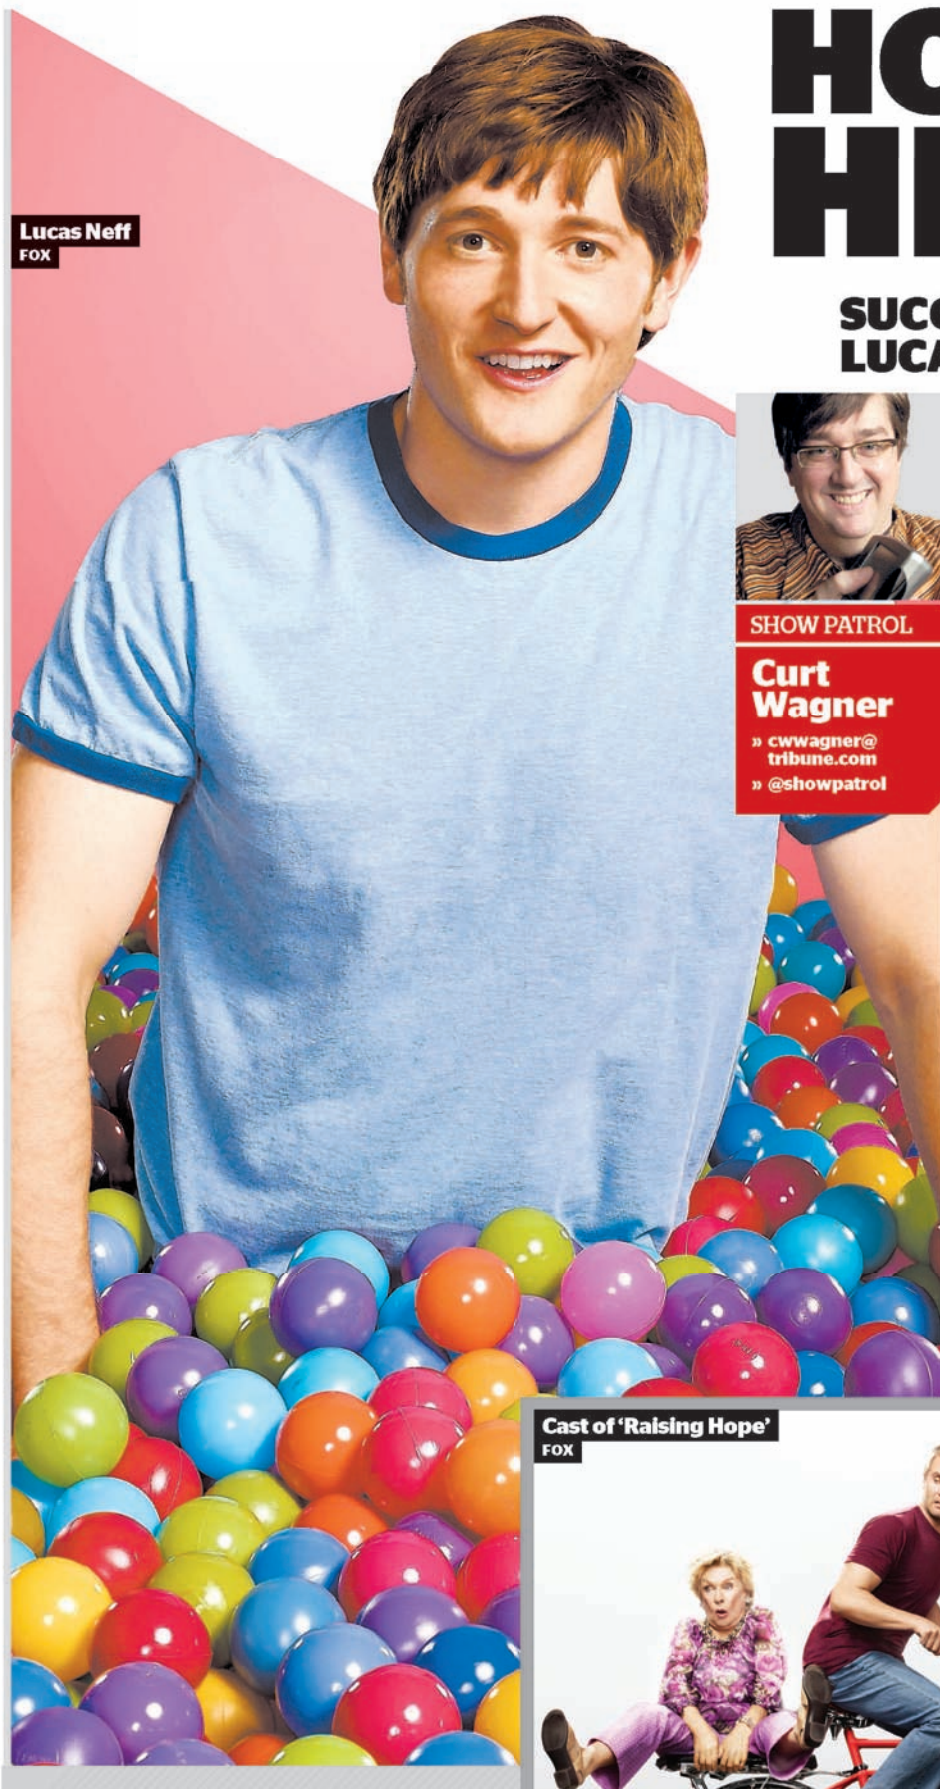

» In the premiere, called "Prodigy," 13-year-old YouTube sensation Greyson Chance will play Neff's character, Jimmy, as a 15-year-old in flashback. So we can assume Jimmy once was musically talented? "Look at you, Nancy Drew. It would seem that the evidence is aligning in that way, yes."

» Richard Dean Anderson will guest star as a man who thinks Jimmy is hitting on his 13-year-old daughter. "MacGyver did an episode, which was a blast," Neff said. "That was a lot of fun. Those days were pretty cool. I was also a big 'Stargate' nerd."

Yo Gabba Gabba will appear in the second episode of the season. "Maybe I shouldn't say that. We have some giant plush monsters on set this year. We'll say that."

» We've seen Cloris Leachman's Maw-Maw character mostly in a state of hilarious dementia. But she will be more lucid in flashback scenes this season. "We're doing a lot of flashbacks. One scene in particular with Cloris is just, I don't want to say because it's just so funny. But she's got some good stuff coming up in Season 2."

HOMETOWN HILARITY

SUCCESS ON 'RAISING HOPE' MEANS LUCAS NEFF CAN AFFORD NEW SOCKS

Lucas Neff knows he's a lucky guy.

Just a year ago Neff, who grew up in Andersonville, was starting to do press for his first major on-screen role in the Fox sitcom "Raising Hope." He was new to Hollywood, to the hype, and to working with TV and film veterans such as Cloris Leachman, Martha Plimpton and Garret Dillahunt.

Having a season under his belt hasn't jaded him.

"No matter what direction I turn there's somebody really talented and awesome standing there," Neff said recently. "Yeah, I just kind of get to soak it in and enjoy it. I hope that it continues for at least another eight to 10 years."

A 10-year run could be tough for the series, which returns at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday hoping just to increase its viewership.

Neff plays Jimmy Chance, the single father of baby Hope who lives with his quirky parents, Virginia and Burt (Plimpton and Dillahunt), and his Maw-Maw (Leachman). The Fox comedy had a strong first season creatively, earning two Emmy nominations and critical praise for balancing outlandish comedy with heartwarming moments as the Chance clan strives to do right by Hope and each other.

Expect more of the same in Season 2 when the family heads to Vegas, deals with a kidnapping and a case of mistaken intentions, all while facing the next milestones in baby Hope's young life. Neff promises many more wacky misadventures this season.

Neff was a little worried last season that the show might not get a second, but since receiving the good news, "I haven't yet once worried about paying rent." Now 25, he lives with Kelly O'Sullivan, whom he met doing theater: in Chicago and moved to L.A. with when he was hired for "Raising Hope." The two now are engaged.

He's been enjoying many perks of success. "Gas, I can fill the rest of the tank all the way up, which is great," he quipped. "I eat regularly, if not too regularly. I bought more socks, which is great because I'm always losing socks. So it's nice to get some more white ankle socks, real nice. Yeah, I got a Frisbee. That was fun."

'Workaholics': Funny, not gross

By Curt Wagner | REDEYE

"Workaholics" star Anders Holm got married to his Evanston Township High School sweetheart earlier this month, not long after he turned 30.

"I'm wrapping it all up, grown-man status," the Evanston native said during a phone interview a few weeks before the wedding. You should not expect Ders, the character Holm plays in the raunchy Comedy Central series, to grow up as the second season begins at 9:30 p.m. Tuesday. Ders, Adam (Adam Devine) and Blake (Blake Anderson) are still the slacker stoners who live, play and avoid work together.

"If it was up to my fiancée, I'm sure he'd grow up a little bit, but then the checks would stop," Holm said. "So I've got to remain a buffoon or else I don't think the show will go much longer."

You can call his character a buffoon, but don't call the show a "gross-out comedy." I found out that Holm does not agree.

Now that you guys are famous and you get this hit show and a second season, have you become high maintenance?

I've always been a little high maintenance. I'm like upper middle class maintenance. I don't know if I were to be too high maintenance, but let's just say I appreciate a coconut water a little bit more these days.

Season 1 you filmed in the house where you all lived. Same thing for Season 2?

I never actually lived at that house because it was gross and had rats. And I was in a relationship with a lady, or I still am. Those guys have since moved out as well. Kyle has moved a little closer to the beach so he can surf non-stop. And Adam and Blake are renting a house together in the Hills, just a total coke mansion. ... I'm not talking about the people who inhabit it, but it's just a total like '70s coke lair.

In the second season premiere of "Workaholics," roommate slackers Ders, Adam and Blake go undercover at a local high school after something is stolen from their yard. Anders Holm offers this tease: "We kind of sleuth our way into a high school and find out who took this specific cold-blooded object off our lawn and get it back, or crack some skulls in the process."

That's funny.

There's definitely been like outdoor sex has at this house.

But not those guys having it?

I wouldn't know.

What can we expect in Season 2?

Season 2 you can expect more full-frontal; just a lot more homo eroticism. What else? Oh, there's kind of like a Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles thing that's gonna go down. ...

We give up drinking for a week and all hell breaks loose, and we're like at each other's throats, and like get into some physical altercations. And then we have to meet with the HR guy and go through a pretty rigorous alcoholics substance abuse program type thing. The guy who plays our HR rep is Mitch Hurwitz of "Arrested Development" fame.

Things can get raunchy on the show. Has Comedy Central ever asked you not to do something?

Only in Season 1, we had an episode where the guys wanted to do a get-rich-quick kind of scheme. ... Blake's character is like, "What if we came up with a flame-retardant American flag?" You can never burn an American flag. And we're like, "Oh, that's really cool." So throughout the episode we're just burning American flags because we're trying [to test it]. It's like research and development. And we burned like 70 flags. Comedy Central wasn't too keen on that.

Ah, you have to get that in. That's smart and funny.

Hey, Season 3, it's going in. Yeah, we're going to argue that one in. That was it though. And I kind of understand where they're coming from.

How does a kid from Evanston end up making gross-out comedy?

Do you call it gross-out comedy?

Yeah, it can be gross.

It's not that gross to us. I think that's the thing, is that it's like when your grandpa sees your iPad, he's like, "I don't understand this." And it's like, "Well, you're just behind the times." I think we are ahead of the times, so it may come across as gross, but in 10 years it's not going to be that gross. It's going to seem pretty dated, I think. What's not to like?

I'm not saying that I don't like it.

No, of course. ...

"Gross out," you can paint me with that brush, if it helps you.

I'm so sorry that I said that. I'll just call it "awesome" from now on.

Oh, so now it's awesome.

The thing that I love about the show is how you guys really do give it a lot of heart, even though there's a lot of crazy stuff going on.

Well, we try. We're similar to some other shows on TV but we had to set ourselves apart. So we think adding a little heart to a [bleeping] "gross-out comedy" might be something different.

I already apologized for that, Anders.

The headline is going to be like "Gross-out comedy is back." "We talked with a dumb idiot named Anders who couldn't spell until his girlfriend started doing his homework."

FYI

All riled up and ready for awards season after Sunday's Emmys? You've got a while to wait. The Golden Globe Awards—Hollywood's next big night—aren't until Jan. 15. But it's never too early to start planning your snacks!

Red carpets & rumors

No way! That post-Emmys gossip can't be true—right?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Are you over your Emmys hangover yet? After an evening of shockingly awesome wins and even more shockingly bad dresses, Hollywood wasn't ready to get off the awards show gossip train. We investigated the biggest rumors of the night. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM

RUMOR: THE BEAUTY PAGEANT SPOOF WAS SPONTANEOUS

As the lovely nominees for best actress in a comedy pranced their way onstage one by one, we wondered between delighted squeals whether they'd plotted it in advance. Turns out comedic genius Amy Poehler teamed up with fellow nominee Martha Plimpton to orchestrate the whole thing, Poehler's rep said, according to nymag.com. Somebody give those ladies an award!

RUMOR: 'SUNDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL' DID A NUMBER ON THE SHOW'S RATINGS

While Sunday's Emmys telecast didn't lose viewers in the 18-49 demo compared to the Jimmy Fallon-hosted 2010 ceremony, the Philadelphia vs. Atlanta game snagged 21.5 million overall viewers compared with the Emmys' 12.4 million, Nielsen reports. Jane Lynch just couldn't beat those spandex-clad buns.

RUMOR: ALEC BALDWIN SKIPPED THE SHOW AFTER HIS RUPERT MURDOCH JOKE WAS CUT

While Jack Donaghy was MIA from the Emmys, it wasn't a counter-snob for Baldwin's pre-recorded bit getting the ax. Instead, Baldwin was hosting Tony Bennett's 85th birthday party in New York, people.com reports. And by party, we clearly mean gala.

This much funny is too much for one family, right? Think again—Melissa and Jenny are cousins. Jenny tweeted: "Congrats to my cousin melissa mccarthy on her Emmy win!!" after Melissa—who between this and "Bridesmaids" is having pretty much the best year ever—left the stage.

$1,000,000 «THE DIGIT

That was the listed price of a Civil War-era photo that an eBay seller claims is of an undead Nicolas Cage, according to time.com. In the item description he claimed Cage is "some sort of walking dead / vampire, et cetera." The auction sadly has been taken down, but maybe it will inspire Cage to get a role on "True Blood."

Husband and father

Ne-Yo and his longtime girlfriend, Monyetta Shaw, are making it official. A rep for the "Closer" singer tells Us Weekly that the couple is engaged—and expecting a second child. They first became parents last year with the birth of their daughter, Madilyn Grace. GETTY IMAGES/PHOTO

HOT DATE

Sept. 26

That's when "The Colbert Report" will expand to a full hour to accommodate an appearance by Radiohead.

"I look forward to meeting the Radioheads and leveraging their anti-corporate indie cred to raise brand awareness for my sponsors."

—Colbert said in a statement.

Stop believin'

Ava Fabian, an ex-Playmate married to Journey guitarist Neal Schon, told TMZ she's "hurt" after her "Don't Stop Believin'" hubby absconded with "Real Housewives of D.C." cast member and White House gate-crasher Michael Salahi. We're just amazed the 1980s are getting all this press.

FLAT & ROASTED

Hit by a subway train. Ending months of speculation, that's how Charlie Sheen's character was killed off on Monday's season premiere of "Two and a Half Men." And then a half-hour later he was raked over the coals in his Comedy Central roast. "You're the black sheep of a family responsible for three 'Mighty Ducks' movies," Jeffrey Ross joked. In another anticipated season debut, "Dancing With the Stars" saved Chaz Bono for last, and his 17 out of 30 points from the judges put him in the middle of the pack. The results episode is 7 p.m. Tuesday.

“ I had to be back at work this morning with a destroyed voice, but it was all worth it.”
